I've been seeing some very unusual behavior, and it seems to be a result of using a hashed password for the authentication. Every time the user logs in, their session_id cookie contains the same value as the username field in the login page: I login with user name "Auxtest" and password "123", and the value of the cookie is "Auxtest123". The problem is, if I change the username to "Auxtest01" or "Auxtest12" the value of the cookie does not change, and remains "Auxtest123". Now, obviously this is not a problem if the user's username is always "Auxtest". But if the user's username may or may not contain numbers or letters, it should change the value of the cookie, to something like "Auxtest123". My question is, why doesn't it? I've seen lots of websites which work this way, and they do make it easier for people to browse (newer) pages. But I would like to know the reason why it's not a good idea
